I am a Spanish artist, curator and art director living in London. I have transitioned my artistic practice to creating art about genetics. I am interested in how artworks about genetics interact with the subject and with the audience, and how accurately such artworks present their scientific concepts. My goal is to synthesise the concepts of genetics into artworks that create an emotional response so that people react to them as a human experience.

I consider myself a mixed media artist. I am currently exploring interactivity through programming and physical computing, and researching bioplastics as a way of expressing genetics through art. My artworks have always encompassed the exploration of different materials to express the subject; photography on textile, animation, video, resin, stone and iron sculpture.
